Perpetual Accuracy without winding

SIXTEEN TEAMS ago, Roles announced a miracle of soth-century Protection of the first permanently waterproof and self-winding watch in the world. Today, the Oyster-Perpetual graces the wrists of men and women -in every continent, and has borne the test of every climate. The secret of the Oyster-Perpetual is a patented rotor which turns perpetually on its own axis, so that the alightest motion of the wrist, automatically winds the movement—and keeps it wound. In addition, the permanently moisture-proof and dustproof patented Oyster case protects the watch against damp and dirt - its greatest enemies. Cased in steel or glowing succerat, gold, the Oyster-Perpetual is indeed the world's finest waterproof and selfwinding watch - bar one. That exception is the Rolex Datejust, the first and most perfect waterproof and selfwinding calendar wrist chromometer.

are returning to take up duties in armed merchant cruiser ..

All holders of British Council scholarships, the students, most of them with a Ph.D. degree, com-prised the 45th, butch of scholars leaving China for England. They left in . 1945 after being selected by examination, and some by their qualifications.

Meeting the scholars on board the Carthage were Mr. Robert Bruce, representative of the British Council in Hong Kong, and Miss A. Stephen, Passage Officer of the Directorate of Cilvil Aviation Office, Hong Kong.

Among the arrivals was the only woman scholar, Professor Wu Su-hsuen, who was invited by the British Council last year to be a travelling professor in

Born at Yetu, Shantung Province, Professor Wu devoted her whole life to education. After graduating from the National Central University in 1930, she taught there for seven years Professor Wu left for the United States in 1037 and studied botany at the University of Michigan until 1941. She returned to China und joined the teaching staff of Peking University. While in England she studied at Edinburgh and Oxford and visited various universities. Professor. Wu is leaving for Another batch of 20 Chinese students is expected to arrive here, by air from Shanghai next week. They are going to various British universities to take up similar courses in biology, engineering, meteorology, sociology and geography.

Travelling vith the students were Professor K.M. Willoy, who is to join Fuhten University at Shanghal, and Miss Jacqueline Marcelle Stokes, who will be English lecturer at the Peking Normal-College.

Among those whe greeted the scholars on board was Mr. ritt, Rev. M. McLoughlin, Rev. Thomas Ma, manager of the Chinese-language newspaper, Ta Kung Pd, Hong Kong Branch. Mr. Ms was among the students when they left in 1945. He completed an 18-month course in international polifics at London University and returned here last

The arrival of the Carthage followed by three years of Philomarks her return to the regular Far Eastern service of the P. & O. flect. The liner Capton was the only vessel operating on this run. Brake Harmonics

Sir.-With reference to the letter under heading "shricking of brakes" written by L. M. W. I am directed by my Committee to advise the correspondent that this matter was fully discussed at the Kowloon Residents' Assoclation meeting held on August and further, discussed with a representative of Kowloon Motor Bus Company. This gentleman stated that the screeching equanuting when the brakes were applied was caused through the excellent steel of the bruke drum which caused harmonics and they had been experimenting for some considerable time in order to try and eliminate this nuisance. We have fully investigated this matter and are completely satisfled that the Bus Company are taking all steps possible to eradicate this nuisance. They have carried out a considerable number of experiments and it is to be hoped that the problem wil soon be solved

We have been informed that the Bus Company have communlexted with the manufacturers of the vehicles to obtain further suggestions and would L.M.W. and all Rowloon re-sidents that this motter will continue to be closely watched in the literests of the community. P.W.A. WOOD. Hon, Secretary, K.R.A.

Yugoslav Accusation Against Hungarians

Bolgrado, August 27. The Government today accused Hungary's leaders of plotting to overthrow Marshal Tito in an offort to seize control in Yugoslavia.

A 15-page note, delivered to the Hungarian Legation here, accused the Hungarian Government, and especially the Communist Vice-Premier, Matyas Rakosi, of urging "Yugoslav citizens to revolt and overthrow the legal government of Yugoslavia,"

Hungary put a stop to such actions by its leaders which "connot be interpreted otherwise than as an attempt to impose their will on another people's democratic state."

Yugoslavia declared, "moral and historical responsibility for the situation falls solely on the Hungarian Government." The note clearly paralleled the protest sent on Wodnesday to Rumania, accusing the Rumanian Government and the Communist Foreign Minister-Mrs. Anna Pauker—of similar friendly acts. Both notes stemmed originally from attacks' mude on Marshal Tito by the Communist Informa-

APOLOGISES FOR WASHINGTON

Wroclaw, August 27. An American joined Russian delegates in attacking conditions in the US tonight as the Congress of World Intellectuals neared the end of much talk on what should be done to keep peace.

Russians and their sympathisers gave a standing ovation to Albert E. Kahn of New York who proclaimed "Henry Wallace is next president of the US."

The Congress, due, to adopt people in Britain, do not wan pence resolutions, wildly cheer- war but the other one per cent are ed Kahn who attacked what he termed "nation-wide repression against all true cultural' expression" in America.

Kahn declared the time has come to change American Government leadership and that Wallace was going to do the job. Kahn apologised to the Congress, predominantly Communist or pro-Communist, for American Government policy.

STALIN STILL AT THE HELM

London, August 28. The Soviet Union is still a one-man dictatorship, despite rumours in European capitals that the Politburo is beginning to take over from Stalin.

Diplomatic circles here agree that this is one of the most striking features of the present series of Enst-West talks in Moscow. Stalin, who enters his 70th year in December, still makes all the vital decisions and still holds all the strings of the vast puppet show that is Russia.

Over-Population

Over-population of the globe has been advanced many times as a major.

The Amazon, largest and one of the longest rivers in the world—rising in the Peruvian Andes and emptying into the Atlantic on the Equator—has an average population of only one person to every square mile in the area it irrigates.

The United States supports about—140 million inhabitants. Britain has little more than the odd forty million. Yet this territory has a known 300,000 persons only.

"There would be a solution to overpopulation there—and that would be a big step nearer peace," said the man behind the other tea-cup. "Over-population causes unemployment and depressions, yet what must be one of the most productive areas of the earth in this, the twentieth century, is still as it was before history began."

With that challenge at the back of their minds delegates from Britain, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, France, Peru, Venezuela and the States will get together with the local authorities and experts in Lima, Peru, rifles in one hand and all manner of technical gadgets in the other. They will study the climate, record the weather, survey sites for towns and landing strips to open up the territory by air to the outside world.

From the Amazon natives the white man first learned about rubber and quining.

"Because of that we own them a debt and will do all we can to help them—if they will let us," says Dr. Alfred Metraux, Swiss anthropologist, attached to Unesco, who is working on the preliminary plans. "Moreover we hope they can teach us much more about medicinal plants."

In addition to studies of animal, fish and plant life, with a view to commercial development, the expedition hope to discover valuable new forests of rubber-bearing trees.

They may even unearth deposits of uranium and plutonium—vital in the manufacture of atomic energy.

manufacture of atomic energy.

But their thoughts will be turned towards peace, not war.

As the jungle tractors which proved their worth in the South Pacific war roar inland later this year the explorers will be hoping that the natives with their blowguns loaded with curare-dipped arrows will share their peaceful sentiments!

Most of the equipment carried will he war-tested material from the tropical battlefields of the last war. The major difficulty will be the supply lines. In steaming jungle, where even rifle ammunition deteriorates rapidly until it is undependable in any emergency, the expedition will probably be serviced from the air.

A great deal of time will be devoted to the natives of the hinterland—their beliefs, customs, habits and folklore—and they will be encouraged to keep their cultures intact. Except that any head-hunting ambitions will be discouraged.

HOMING STOOL PIGEON FRED MAJDALANY

My researches into the unfathomable depths of the tortured human soul began this week with Kiss of Death a harsh but entertaining item devoted to the sorrows, hopes, and fears of a handsome stool-pigeon who loves children.

As the ethics and domestic disadvantages of "squealing" are not commonly studied in crime films, this one can claim some originality.

The chief character (Victor Mature) learns while in prison that his wife has committed suicide after being unfaithful to him,

As the co-respondent is a gangater about whom he has been keeping his mouth shut, Mr. Mature feels that a breach of the criminal code of silence is justified. Especially when the police enable him to resume contact with his two small daughters, by this time in an orphanage.

A "squealing" having been arranged, and having taken place quietly in the District Attorney's office, a proportion of the underworld is naturally out to get Mr. Mature, whose home life, parole or no parole, becomes intoler-

Mr. Mature passes through the varied emotions of enemy of society, warm-hearted daddy, and enemy of crime with enough skill to hold the sympathy as well the interest; and Richard Widmark gives a chillinglyeffective impression of a sub-human killer.

. Although "London Belongs to Mo" sets out to give a picture of Indomitable, Warmhearted, Cockney life in a South London back street, it soon settles for the usual collection of boarding-house character sketches we know so well.

There are the inevitable nice Mum and Dad . (Fay Compton and Wylle Watson); their daughter (Susan Shaw), who probably runs the local Margaret Lockwood fan club: the odd little spinster (Ivy St. Heller) on the top floor; the flashy youth (Richard Attenborough) who appears to consist mostly of padded shoulders and hairbil; and, of course, that ever-so-refined landlady that Joyce Carey has been alternating with, ever-so-refined barmaids for ever so long.

To say the least, these characters lock the quality of unexpectedness. and one is grateful for the comic relief rather desperately shovelled in by a couple" of grotesques played with gusto by Stephen Murray and Alastair

After a large amount of Indomitable Warm-hearted Cockney living, the story concentrates on the fate of the flashy boy who has stolen a car and pushed a girl out of it.

This eventually becomes interesting not so much because of Mr. Attenborough (whose dramatic range seems largely revealed when he has stared at the camera, terror-stricken, a couple of times), but because Sidney. Gilliat at last lets his sense of fun break loose in a funny murder trial and a funny procession.

The film is pleasantly acted and has its good scenes. But you never lose the impression that this is South-East London seen through West London

I always enjoy films concerned with dirty work aboard Continental trains. They have an idlom of their own. I sald. A hundred yards from our caravan a tent was pitched beneath some trees. A covered waggon stood near the tent. Two dogs, chained to the axle, barked savagely when we passed on our way to the swamp. They strained at the chains so that their front legs were lifted from the ground and I thought they would choke.

Their barking sometimes disturbed the inmates of the tent and a woman would emerge, stooping as she lifted the canvas flap, and shouting loudly, as she raised herself erect, "Lay down there!".

Her husband was a tall drover-who stood with his hands in his pockets staring gloomily at the ground or at the worn harness drooping from the shafts of the 'waggon. We caught' glimpses of another couple, a younger man and woman, whom we surmised were a son and daughter-in-law.

The women were self-conscious, almost furtive, as they moved round the camp-fire. They 'puzzled Olive, who looked at them with a slight frown, her equivalent of Plug's "Gawdl I dunno."

On the afternoon we were leaving, the four of them stood in a little group watching us harness the horses. Morgan was restless, and I was afraid that we were in for another display of jibbing.

We were. We had decided to drive them round while waiting for Plug, but Morgan flung himself back, fighting the encircling collar like a fish on a line. Jim, inspired by Morgan, joined the rebellion, and, with the two of them rearing, backing or pawing the earth, we gave what was quite a good exhibition of futility at the reins. At one stage we faced a horseless foreground while the two rebels danced at right angles to the way we wanted to go.

"Boy! what a turntable," I said to Olive, who was sitting on the extreme edge of the seat, suffering in silence. "What's wrong? Won't they go?" The drover and his son had walked

"They'll go up and down, but not forward." I said.

I felt much better. A remark like that does one good. Olive and I climbed down from the seat, and I sat on a log and discussed Morgan with the drover. he was a judge of horses and he knew that Morgan would be as quiet as a: lamb in single harness. "Would you care to swap him tor my horse?" he asked. "He would just"

suit you. He's quiet and can pull anything—a magnificent animal." I could see we would eventually have to get rid of Morgan, so I said, "Let me see your horse."

He nodded to his son, who hurried down to the swamp where the animal was feeding. He returned leading it, and a very reluctant horse it was:

As I looked at it I had the feeling one experiences when witnessing a cloud going over the sun and the approach of heavy fain.

If horses were men the drover's horse would have been a bug-snatcher. But looks can be deceiving, so I said, "I'll give him a trial up the road." "Once you get him in you'll never take him out," said the drover enthusinstically. I didn't doubt it. That horse would object to anything.

Olive, troubled by her knowledge of my, atter, inefficiency as a business man, whispered in my ear, "That horse is bad."

I agreed with her: "A bug-snutcher, if ever there were one.". -The drover and his son had taken the harness' off Morgan and were lowering it on to the back of their horse. At the dirst touch of the "spider" their magnificent animal sank in the middle like the proverbial camel receiving the last-straw. Surely, I thought, this is not a nor-No, warned the spirit of my bush-

THE HUMBLE HARMONICA

LIKE many others, I must admit I have always regarded the harmonica—to which height of vocabulary the mouth-organ has now been raised, as an instrument mostly associated with errand boys and small urchins. I know it played a sterling part in the 1914/1918 War as an easily-carried instrument, and many were the experts who played it for an evening's amusement.

But today I stand corrected — not only that, but a little staggered. Those who heard Chamber Huang's recital over Z.B.W. last week will know what I mean. The harmonica now seems to have come into its own as a musical instrument, and certainly Mr. Huang knows how to bring out its full capabilities. There were times indeed, particularly in Marti's popular "Czarda"—when it sounded more in the nature of a violin. The rapidity at which this was played left me gasping when I recall my own humble efforts on the mouth-organ (pardon—harmonical).

ANYHOW, I feel it is right to record here that I thought this programme very enjoyable. I believe there are to be other recitals by Mr.
Huang in the near future, and I shall certainly be one of his most attentive disteners.

A word in season too, as to the impeccable accompaniment of Clara Stansfeld. Too often is he or she dismissed with phrase "Mr. X accompanied discreetly." What a masterplece of misapprehension! The accompanist can make or mar any recital, and it is he who lifts the sololst along, submerging himself completely to any vagaries or peculiarities which disconcertingly present themselves during the recital. A model for all accompanists and a very fine soloist in his own right, Gerald Moore once claimed that accompanying was the most difficult of all forms of music. Those who have tried their hand at it must know this to be true. I shall have a little more to say of Mr. Huang in next week's notes I believe.

RADIO AUSTRALIA

I ITAPPENED to be listening, (very disloyal to Z.B.W. I know) to Radio Australia the other evening to a programme called "Qulot Listening." Itconsisted of recordings of Bach, han-del and Mozart, played by Wanda Landowska on the harpsichord and the Dolmetsch Family. The latter artistes are a family who live at Haslemere, in the quiet Surrey countryside, have specialised in preserving the 17th Century instruments such as recorders, virginals and viola da gamba. To hear Buch and Handel in this form is to know great music faithfully played and I commend a programme of this nature to Z.B.W. as a worth-while innovation

WANDA Landowska is a great artista whose H.M.V. recordings are models of this music as it should be played. The harpsichord is a difficult instrument to record satisfactorily, since its mechanism is such that the sensitive microphone picks up its surface-noise. However, I know how much trouble H.M.V. took to cut this trouble, and so far as any recordings can. be, the harpsichord is perfectly reproduced in the H.M.V. Issues. Their Connoisseur List particularly contains many recordings not generally available - which are a triumph both of recording skill and of performance.

hut not before I apologise for a "alip of the pen" last week. In noting Dorothy L. Sayer's play, "Who's flody," I stated it was a relay from London. This of course, was quite inaccurate since the feature was recorded on the B.B.C. Transcription Service.

SUNDAY

AMONG the "Famous Overtures" programme is tucked away Schubert's "Rosamunde" Ballet Music. Bowing to any storm which my self-confessed ignorance may entail from balletomanes, I do not recall this charming music ever being used for Ballet as such.

Certain presentations of "Lilac Time," true, use it, or some of it, for a quasi-ballet, but in the accepted sense of the word ballet, no choreographer seems to have used it for production.

There can be but few who do not know it, for it is full of the merriest rhythms and tunes, at which Schubert, was so facile.

featured Symphonist. His No. 5
Symphony is being performed. I referred briefly to Sibelius in this page a few weeks ago, and must therefore avoid any possible repetition. Of the modern composers, Sibelius adheres, I believe, more closely to the classical school than any other. He is certainly the "Grand Old Man" of music today. In all, he has composed seven symphonics and there is an eighth in process of preparation.

AS MUSIC — at first hearing — the listener may find them a little different from the works of Beethoven or Dvorak say, since some of the modern idiom is absorbed into the orchestration. But as "absolute" music—into which 'category any symphony must fall, they are all equally demonstrative of Sibelius' complete grasp of the orchestra as a means of expressive tone-colours. There is little doubt but that Sibelius speaks with the voice of authority in his compositions, and as such, the touch of the master in his compositions must be duly acknowledged.

TUESDAY

THE "British Composers" Series continues at 8.45 on Tuesday night with:— Suite by John Field

John Ireland's Pianoforte Concerto.
John Field was a British composer who lived 1782 to 1837, whose name is mostly associated with many delightful nocturnes he wrote, the influence of which on Chopin is very pronounced. He was a pupil of the great Clements, and if his works are not heard today very frequently, that is not to detract from their merit.

THE John Ireland Concerto is one of the few modern concertos which have stood the test of time. Although now in his seventieth year, there is a dynamic vigour to the works of John Ireland, which quality is very well displayed in the Concerto which is to be played on this night. The concerto is accepted as a worthy addition to the planist's repertoire.

TYPEWRITER ...

This week there are two big changes in your ''Children's Herald' .

The most exciting thing is that the second Mystery Prize has been won. This finishes the Mystery Prizes. Instead, starting with the contributions in this week's issue, .I am going to send special certificates to boys and girls whose work is published. Each cortificate will have a value of so many points, and a prize of $10 will be given to everybody who gains certificates worth 20 points. These certificates are also going to be used for Consolation

Prizes for older children in the competitions. The second change you will find on Page 2. So many contributions have been coming in that I have had to hold many of them for weeks because of lack of space. So 'Brick Bradford'' is now smaller, which means more space for the serial each week, and more puzzles and games. But remember, it all depends on you -- I can't fill the extra space without your help!

Happy days to you all, from

Things to Make

EGGSHELL BOAT

All you need to make a fascinating little boat is half an egg- shell, a piece of plasticine about as large as a marble, a feather and a bit of soap about an inch thick.

.First place the plasticine in the bottom of the eggshell and then push the feather into the plasticine in a perpendicular position.

Now glue the soap on the side of the eggshell so that it is just under waterlevel. Place your boat in water and you will be surprised to see it go.

SHADOW COMPETITION

Here is a new and fascinating type of drawing competition.

All you need is a piece of mosquito net (don't cut one that is being used!), a light and a handkerchief.

Place a table covered with a material under a light, a ceiling light if possible. String the mosquito net about two feet above the table, as illustrated.

Throw the handkerchief up so that when it comes down it will land any old , way on the

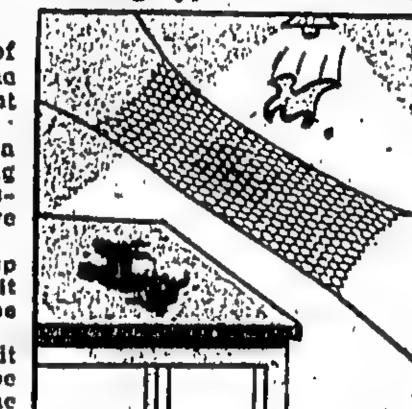

And then look at the shadow it makes on the table. You will be amazed at the silhouettes the handkerchief's thadow makesanimal outlines, geometrical designs, silhouettes of houses, trees, bridges, faces.

·Draw that silhouette—the shape of the shadow on the table. You will have to try quite a number of times, perhaps, before you are successful.

It is not known definitely how London received its name, but it is, thought that it might have come from the Welsh "Ill" -"water," and the Celtic "dun," a "hill fort." Other authorities say that the "Lon" comes from Celtic "lon," "a marsh," or "llyn"—"a grove," or from the Welsh "llong"—"a ship." Whatever its origin, as far back as 61 A.D. our London was known to the Roman world as Londinium or Londinium Augustus.

A PIONEER PASSES

Dr. Yellapragada SubbaRow, fiftytwo, director of research for Leberle Laboratories Division of the American Cyanamid Company and regarded by many scientists as one of the most eminent medical minds of the century, died in Pearl River, N.Y. on August 10.

Among Dr. SubbaRows exploits were investigations which helped to revolutionise the modern concept of muscular contraction: research in that component of liver extract effective in the treatment of pernicious anemia, work with folic acid derivatives which, among other things, has made available a new approach to the study of cancer; and, more recently, the development of a new drug, aureomycin, which promises to treat serious infections in human beings which do not respond either to penicillin or streptomycin.

Dr. SubbaRow was interested in everything from liver extracts to orchids and his work in the last twenty-five years carried him to pinnacles reached by few medical investigators.

Yet probably not more than a handful of itymen ever heard his name, and aside from a brief paragraph in the reference work. "American Men of Science," there was little in the writen record to describe this modest
Indian who stimulated the immagination of hundreds of colleagues.

His curiosity was insatiable. Three years ago he decided he would systematically examine the world around him to fit together a few missing pieces in his experience. He learned to drive an automobile. Then he learned to ride a horse. Then he tearned to fly an airplane, won his license and in the last year had made a number of solo flights. Then he became interested in bowling. And in recent months he had focused this attention on orchids and was trying to devise new ways to make them grow faster.

He went to Harvard in the 20s. In those days he worked and studied in the laboratory during the day and in the school library from, 7 to 10 p.m. For a period he was an orderly at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. His work done, he would return to his laboratory where he and other students in the medical school would sit far into the night discussing problems in chemistry and related fields.

Dr. SubbaRow was born in Madras State, India, of high Brahmanic caste. He received his bachelor of medicine and master of science degrees at Madras University and received a degree of doctor of tropical medicine at University of London, where he met the late Dr. Richard Strong, then head of the Harvard School of Tropical Medicine. It was at Dr. Strong's invitation that Dr. SubbaRow came to the United States in 1923.

Aided Phosphorus Discoveries

While working under Dr. Strong, Dr. Subballow became aware of the deficiency in his understanding of chemistry, so he enrolled in the department of blochemistry at Harvard, where he worked under the late Dr. Olto Folin, eventually taking a Ph.D. degree in the

Some of his earliest work was under the direction of Professor Cyrus H. Fiske, Harvard professor of blochemistry. They devised a method for the determination of phosphorus, a procedure widely used today, which helped to lead eventually to the discovery of a substance known as phosphorus compounds in muscle which has revolutionized man's understanding of the

During the investigation of phosphorus compounds of muscle and liver, Dr. SubbaRow became interested in the component of liver extract that was effective in the treatment of pernicious anemia. His attempts to isolate this active component introduced a series of studies in animal and bacterial nutrition which added much to the fundamental knowledge of vitamin chemis-

Fractionating the liver extract in the course of his investigation, he isolated hundreds of chemical substances; and testing these substances, he demonstrated that some were valuable in the field of animal nutrition and others were valuable in the field of bacterial nutrition.

His researches carried Dr. SubbaRow into a teaching fellowship at Harvard, then to an instructorship and an associate professorship. He was also a Rockefeller Foundation fellow and in 1940 he joined Lederle.

Folic Acid Research

Dr. SubbaRow went to work on the folic acld problem a few years ago. A number of substances known as Vitamin M. Factors U, R. S., etc., Vitamin Bc, Vitamin B-10, B-11, and others, were reported on by investigators and it soon became apparent that all were related to one compound, folic acid. Dr. SubbaRow's study of this compound and his synethsis of it added a weapon in the fight against such diseases as pernicious anemia and sprue, which is a type of anemia.

The study of folic acid also yielded a new approach to the cancer problem and the problem of leukemia. Both of these avenues are being cyplored clinically. They probably will not provide the final answers, but work on them may provide a clue.

COLONIAL FIRST-AID

Britain is now spending £2,000.000 a year on research in the Colonial Empire—the highest amount ever allocated to this type of work.

ed to this type of work.

More than 60 new schemes were approved last year, with nearly 90 supplementary scheres, and there's every indication that the bill will be higher next year.

Object of the great new research drive is to utilise all the resources of the 3,000,000 square miles of the Colcular Empire, with its population of 62,000,000.

The story of this move to mobilise the Empire is told in a Report on Colonial Research (H.M. Stationery Office. Price 2s.), which should rate as a Colonial best-seller.

In far-away Zanzibar, that colourful isle off the east coast of Africa, a scientific commission from Britain investigates the strange "sudden death disease" which is killing the clove plantations. Four-fifths of the world's cloves come from this British Protectorate (where the Sultan is Governor), but unless the disease is stamped out there'll soon be no cloves for the world's apple nice.

world's apple pies.

More than 250,000 islanders carn their living from cloves, and when I flew to Zanzibar some months ago they were pinning all their hopes on this British research. Shally they said that at one time you could scent the Zanzibar cloves far out to sea—but that was before the plantations were stricted.

If the cloves die the island dies too for they — and a little copra — are the only exports. Take a plane from Zanzibar to the East African mainland and within less than bour you'll meet research men conducting new trials for fertilisers.

Surveyors have discovered a great deposit of phosphate rock in Uganda which they hope to convert into agricultural fertilisers. Young British farmers who have gone out since the war watch the experiments with interest. They've a hard furrow to plough; new fertilisers will help.

In East Africa too a professional fish farmer from Palestine now investigates the possibilities of fish farming to improve the African diet. Away on the West coast his colleagues experiment with shark fishing, and a research station with its own vessel is planned for South-East Asia.

Motor fishing-craft have also been fitted out for exploratory and experimental fishing on the coasts of Arabia, Somaliland, Borneo, and Sarawak. In West Africa also medical men are

In West Africa also medical men are studying what keeps a man fit in the Tropics and already they've killed the idea that the coast today is the "White Man's Grave."

It's been discovered, however, that the drug paludrine — successful in keeping down maluria in India: and Malaya—doesn't work so well in Africa. So, African malaria parasites are now being bred in Britain for fresh research.

A puzzle for medical experts is young Miss Small, of Beeston, Leeds, the first baby girl to be born in her family for 150 years.

Doctors cannot explain why she has broken a record which kept the Smalls saying: "It's a boy" for five generations.

The frequently quoted theory on the subject that the chromosomes which determine sex are predominantly male or female in certain families has never been proved.

Little is known about the determination of the nex ratio though records prove that baby boys always outnumber girls. The ratio is reversed later because boys are more difficult to rear

A notable instance of a long succession of girl babies is the Dutch Royal Family which has had only afteen male descendants since 1553.

Another remarkable case is that of Sir Robert Ian Algernon Forbes-Leith's family. A daughter born in 1932 was the first for 180 years.

HURSTMONCEUX CASTLE

It may seem surprising that the Astronomer Royal, Sir Harold Spencer Jones, F.R.S., should talk about an ancient castle in the 'Landmarks of Britain' series this week, but there is a reason. Hurstmonceux Castle with some 370 acres of ground has been purchased by the Admiralty as the future home of the world-famous Royal Greenwich Observatory, which it transferring from Greenwich because of the deterioration of conditions for astronomical observations there, Several years will be required to transfer all the equipment and for the erection of a great 100-inch reflecting telescope. Lane Norcott How To Read A Good Book

This is not easy, for since the Paper Act of 1952 (which made the importation, manufacture, and distribution of paper a State monopoly, and limited its use exclusively to the needs of Government Departments) good books have been beyond the means of all but the wealthiest of Civil Servants.

Last month, in answer to an aged literate heckler who claimed that one of his fore-bears had bought in the open market a copy of "Sense And Sensibility" for 5s., the Minister of Mass Education said: "To reprint to-day such a subversive work, redolent of middle-class prejudice, would be tantamount to sacrificing 5,000 London Passenger Transport Board posters, or 80,000 assorted Forms, or 1 (one) advertisement in the national Press of a Ministry of Food recipe for a savoury snock loaf sufficient for four people. The country simply cannot afford such bourgeois luxuries."

We print below the original and current prices of a few good or useful books which are occasionally to be obtained under the barrow from literary spivs in the Charing Cross-road Black Market:

Market;
Swift's Journal to Stella (pub. 2s. 6d.;

Bacon's Essays (5s.; 22 British dollars).
Wuthering Heights, (6s.; 30 British dollars or 1 lb. butter).

Elementary English Grammar (out of print, 3s. 6d.; 65 British dollars).
School Atlas (out of print, 1s.; 50 British dollars).
For citizens suffering from insomnia, whose reading is limited entirely to the workers' dormitory, there are of course, a vast number of cheap, Statesubsidised publications, which—are obtainable at any national hookshop, canteen, or railway bookstall. Among the most popular are the following: The Collected Speeches of the Rt. Hon.

Ancurin Bevan, "The Great Gabbo" (25 British cents).
1,001 Ways To Cook Imported Birds of Prey (15 British cents).
What To Do Before You Go To The

Doctor (50 British cents).
Facts About National Glue (10 British cents).
How To Behave in a Cultural Centre

(5 British cents).

No permit is required to purchase any of the above works, but citizens who are caught pulping them, for the purpose of selling the paper to underground publishers are liable to severe penalties.

(Issued by the Lane Norcott Second Sight Bureau. Hashish And Opium Substitutes Always In Stock. Secrecy A Sacred Trust. Oblivion Guarantees.)

The average long novel is an elephantine humbug. As I toil through interminable family-sagas I can feel no conviction that the author, when .. he set out, had any genuine objective,
His story has merely grown; he has,
edded to it and added to it, as to some nightmare piece of knitting.

The result (to continue to mix metaphors) resembles more than anything else a gigantic shapeless garment, all arms and legs and carelessly dropped and clumsily picked-up stitches, in which no shape of solid reality could ever be accommodated.

Only Way To Handle it

Champion Road, by Frank Tilsley, the Daily Mail choice for August, is a very, very long book—indeed, at 692 closely printed pages, quite one of the longest to appear in 1948.

But it has other remarkable qualities besides its unusual length; and if the novelist has decided to spread himself beyond the common measure, that, I believe, is because he is attacking a large subject and, given his method and point there was no other means of handing it.

For Tilsley belongs to the school of realists which was started by Daniel Defoe and afterwards revived, with varying degrees of success, by George Moore and Arnold Bennett.

Many novelists are deliberately selective. What they decide to leave out is just as important as what they choose to put in; whereas writers of the Tilsley school produce an impression of life by including overy detail.

It's An All-In Picturé

The crack in the tea-cup, a gesture of despair, a quarrel with one's wife, an awkward letter to the bank manager—all are reported by the novelist with the same impartiality.

A perilous procedure no doubt, but in "Champion Road" it comes off.

I must admit that I embarked on Frank Tilsley's book with one or two very definite though, perhaps unreasonable, prejudices. I have never lived in industrial Lancashire and am therefore only moderately interested in the private lives of its inhabitants—I abominate speculative builders—and, as I have already suggested, the mammoth novel is a form with which I have very little sympathy.

"Champion Road" overcame them all. At first the attention I gave was grudging: but gradually this account of Jonathan Briggs' unscrupulous and amitious progress—from a newspaper-round to command of a thriving modern industy—began to develop and acquire momentum; and I found myself growing more and more deeply involved in the triumphs and defeats, the splendours and misories, of Tilsley's unheroic heat.

He is not heroic, but he is exceedingly real; and so is the redhaired, indomitable, tight-lipped woman whom he marries—who refuses to follow him in his social ascent, yet remains grimly devoted to her husband in spite of infidelities.

Both are ordinary people, and it is Frank Tilsley's appreciation of, and ability to convey, the extraordinariness of the ordinary— the drama of humdrum everyday existence—that makes his novel so convincing.

Wrapped Up In His 'People'

He is passionately interested in the characters he describes. But he never moralises at their expense, and never seems to patronise them. They are human beings, and that is enough for him—Jonathan, grasping, selfish, and dishonest, hard at work increasing his bank balance, and planing row after row of flimsy brick boxes across green and pleasent farmland; his wife, his business cronics, and his various foolish mistresses.

"Champion Road" is the story of a jerry-builder—planned on generous and unpretentious lines by one of the more intelligent of our modern literary architects.

HENSON LAUGH STORY

One of the great clowns of this age—the man who is just as funny as he looks—reveals his biggest blunder in his autobiography. Yours Faithfully, Leslie Henson (John Long, 12s. 6d.).

It happened in New York in 1915. He was playing in "Tonight's the Night," the show he had joined in London as understudy to three stars with a small part of his own, all for £5 a week.

The theatre across the road was showing a Marie Dressler film called "Tilly's Punctured Romance," introducing a sensational new comedian from England named Charlie Chaplin.

An enterprising film producer wanted to cash in on the Chaplin craze by setting up Leslie Henson as a rival. He offered him $500 a week for the first picture, $1,000 for the second, $1,500 for the third.

Leslie, then earning $50 a week, said: "No, thanks. I don't think this moving picture business will last any longer than roller skating."

Instead the little man with the strangulated voice and the piscatorial leer (they called him "Troutie" even at school) came home to join the Army and make his name in those great days of musical comedy at the Winter Garden and the Galety. Leslie Henson was born into the meat business and began life behind the counter of a Hackney butcher's shop. But after 18 months in the family firm he abandoned carcases for concert party and joined "The Tatlers" at Penarth.

His early struggle, his West End successes (12 long runs in a row, with no more than a fortaight's break in between), and his marathon war-time travels to entertain the troops—he recounts them all in this racy, readable, pleasantly conversational book.

U.S. STARS U.K. SONGS

British song publishers are beginning to discover the British song.

In and around London's Charing Cross-road there are 40 publishers of popular songs, turning out about 2,000 songs a year. So far 75 per cent, of that output has been American. But now the ratio is likely to be adjusted—and if it is it will be largely the Americans, own doing. For example, Topping the bill at the West End's two variety theatres this week are (as usual) two American acts — the Andrews Sisters at the Palladium, and Hoagy Carmichael at the Casino.

It is a British song that stops the Andrews Sisters' show every night—"Underneath the Arches," written by Bud Flanagan in a Derby dressing-room 22 years ago. In its heyday here it sold 1,000,000 copies. Today it is the new rage in America, all because it was slipped into a gramophone record broadcast by an ex-G.L who had heard it in England.

Among the shouts for encores after Hoagy Carmichael's act you will hear "Souvenirs"—short for "Among My Souvenirs," the one song associated with the "Stardust" man that he didn't write himself.

"Souvenirs" is one of the 1,000 songs written, by Britain's 58-year-old Horatio Nicholls. He wrote it 21 years ago on a car trip from London to Llandudno. It sold 3,000,000 copies and contributed £20,000 towards his £1,000,-000 song earnings.

Hongy Carmichael had one song to sing in the film "The Best Years of Our Lves." Of all the songs available (his own 80 included) he chose horatio Nicholls' forgotten tune and turned it into an American best seller.

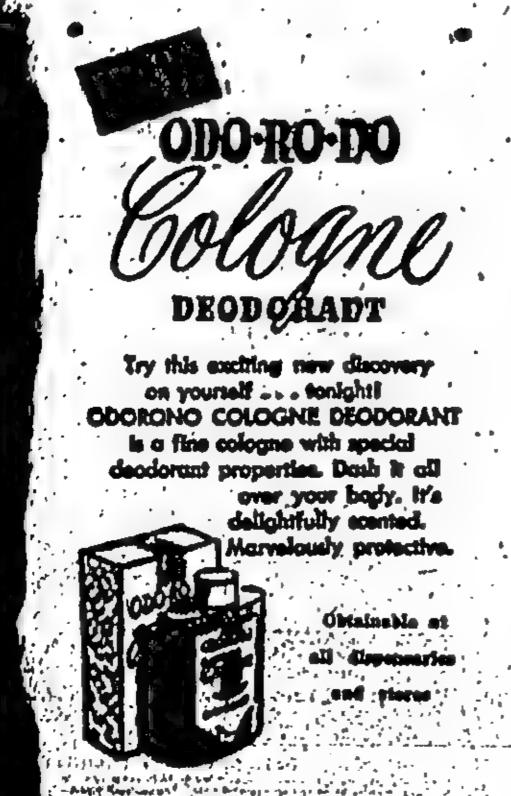

New British songs are also getting themselves noticed on both side of the Atlantic. "Galway, Bay," written by a Leicester psychiatrist; Dr. Arthur Colahan, is in its 14th week as No. 1 best seller on this side and has already topped 500,000 copies.

An American song, "Dance, Baller-ina, Dance," comes a close second, but other British songs are pushing to-wards the top—among them.—"Time May Change" (Hugh Wade's biggest hit in 12 years of composing) and "The Dream of Olwen."

Olwen is the wonder girl of Tin Pan Alley. The song was originally a plano piece, written by Charle's Williams for the film "While I Live." Its publisher. Lawrence Wright (alias Horatio Nicholls), claims no credit for it. He would have turned it down, but his manager and his salesman out-talked him.

Now, with a lyric attached, it is selling 10,000 copies a week—at 2s. 6d., not the usual is.—and has already sold over 100,000,——CECIL WILKON.

No. 2. How To Replace A Broken Roof Tile.

Under Section B. Para 8 of the Amalgamated Trades Protection Act (1954) it is illegal for a State dwellingholder to replace a broken roof tile with his own hands. Nor may he permit the work to be done by a relation, friend, or any full- or part-time licensed domestic lady or gentleman help-

Upon finding a broken roof tile on the ground, the dwelling-holder should immediately notify his local Amalgamated Trades Protection Officer, who will send an Examiner to inspect it and write a report upon its size, shape. and condition.

This report will be placed before the Regional Work Allotment Board and In due course the dwelling-holder will rereive a Sancton T Card, stating the type and grade of craftsman that he may employ to restore the tile, weather permitting.

Saction T Cards are valid for seven consecutive days only, and it is essential that the dwelling-holder shall take this document promptly to his local National Labour Lounge, where, for a fee of one British dollar, his requirements will be entered on an Approved ·Application Display Card.

This card will be hung in the Workers' Hall of Leisure and Rest and. should it catch the eye of any digengaged tiler and the job appeal to him, then the dwelling-holder will be requested-to-present-himself-at-a-statedtime for an interview.

The penalties for replacing loose or broken tiles without the assistance or advice of an approved licensed craftsman are very severe, and include for-felture of State Pleasure Dockets, Free Syrup Coupons, and Canteen Meal Vouchers, and temporary or total banishment from Cultural Centres and Discussion Groups.

The laws prescribe penalties for irregularities in blds or plays but not for improprieties in connection with these. Forty of these improprieties can be posted up in every cardroom to precidentally, are in nearly all cases innocent), but otherwise only a personal warning can as a rule stop these in-formative and innocent improprieties.

Curiously enough the degree of impropriety can vary with the kind of game and with the degree of skill of the offender. Thus a "slow pars' may be legitimate in Duplicate, where play is against other tables, but too informative in rubber bridge, or it may be legitimate for a week player in rubber bridge but not for an expert.

In the 1934, Anglo-American match for the Schwab Cup there was a discussion on a long pause in the bidding which was settled amicably. Such discussions are almost unheard-of in important matches, although long pauses are usual.

Although improprieties in nearly all. cases are innocent they can cause loss. to the non-offending side when the partner of the offender takes advantage of the impropriety — which he should avoid doing. The guiding principle to keep in mind is that it is reprehensible to profit by information. thus gained, and therefore that all four players should assist in preventing or avoiding such irregularities or improprieties. Hesitations are not so harmful. as many of the other improprieties, all of which require handling with tact. and fairness.

It would be a pity to interfere with the flow of amusing remarks during a sporting rubber by having to bother about improprieties. There is no need for suggestions on adjustments in these rubbers, but in Duplicate a generous adjustment may be unfair to other tables.

There is special interest in these shoulder lines, with their attractive yoke effects, which will be quite spoilt if pads are inserted . . . so don't be tempted to put in even the smallest size.

The first is a delicate trifle concocted from white nylon georgette, lace insertion and edging, and a couple of yards of the narrowest black satia ribbon.

The lines are very simple. Just a plain round neck, not too high at the throat and elbow length sleeves with a little fullness. It is the lace treatment which makes this blouse into something special, insertion lace outlines the neck, the yoke and front panel and edges the gathered sleeves. Lace edging is stitched all along the outer sides of the insertion, forming tlny frills around the neck and just above the cibows , . . The narrow ribbon, slotted through the inscrition lace, enhances the design and draws attention to the beauty of the lace. The second design is in fine handkerchief linen, trimmed with a combination of embroidery and lace. The deep shoulder yake is encircled by a band of cut out embroidery in the daisy motif.

London Stock

London, August 27. Yesterday's brightness was no continued in the London Stock Exchange today, Some irregularity was to be seen in most seetions but price changes were amali, amounting to a new perice Gilt-edged stocks showed an occasional loss of 1/16 but there was insufficient business to really test the price levels.

Among industrials, tobaccos, textiles and breweries were slightly lower but frons and steels Shippings registered gains, ' featured a sharp rise with Cunards at 37/3.

There was marked duliness throughout the oil market on scattered selling.

Speculators were again active in Brazilian utility stocks. Once Great Western Brazil Railway. resulting in a sliarp advance in the price of this issue.

South African Mintings opened with an all round improvement. Cape advices revealed good buying at Johannesburg with Free State issues the centre of attraction.
